DC DOES IT AGAIN

The DC Rebirth event has been an unarguable success. DC titles are back in the Top 20 and Marvel's best titles are now the Star Wars family. Marvel are gamely killing off 'big' characters in Civil War II to try to catch up, but it would seem the comic buying public are not being taken in. Even the killing of Bruce Banner has hardly raised ripples. I admit to being stunned and surprised, then saddened, but this has been an exit point for some long term readers and Hulk fans. Totally Awesome Hulk is not quite the same for us old timers.

So once again it lays with DC to reinvigorate the medium. Admittedly it was their fault that their New 52 line of titles had been losing sales so quickly. It wasn't the fans that demanded poor artwork and lack lustre storylines, nor did they demand last year's Convergence debacle.

Still, good has come out of bad as this fresh take on their characters is actually very, very good. Better artwork all round and better stories. Something their movie division should pay attention to - good stories that is. Batman v Superman: Dawn Of Justice failed, as Suicide Squad is failing, due to a total lack of a solid story that makes sense as it goes from A to Z. All the special effects in the world will not make up for a deficient plot. Children and teens are the best arbiters of story as they seem to intuitively know when the plot holds together. Several teens I know have been and given both films the thumbs down. The main comment: flashy, but that is all.

Back to the comics. DC's bold move into multiple bi-weekly series seems to be working and fans adapting to a two-comics-a-month approach. Here is hoping that the quality continues.

We can gauge if what DC do is good / successful because Marvel will generally follow about six months later! They did after the New 52 launch, but, they made a real hash of it with all their restarts (Marvel NOW!) not really having a unified approach. Then they tried a 'kill the universe' and restart approach with Secret Wars, which was also met with limp enthusiasm.

Now we learn that, starting in October, there will be a reduction in the number of regular titles and yet another slew of new books. Unfortunately there doesn't seem to be a cohesive reason for this, besides their 'number ones sell' mantra. Having looked at the titles announced so far, I am less than impressed. Time will tell, I suppose. I just really hope that they up the artistic quality and get good writers. It is as simple as that.

SECONDLY

So the country voted for Brexit! Despite my warnings of exchange rate madness. Now it costs more to travel abroad and import from anywhere in the world. As predicted comics and graphic novels have risen in price. Here at ACE, while we have held the comic increase to just 10-11 percent, unfortunately graphic novels have gone up by 15-25 percent. I predict a little trimming will be done as you guys and gals take a good look at some titles to make sure it really is a good read. How this will affect comic stores in the UK will take a good six to nine months to unfold.

On Ebay I have seen some ridiculously low prices on comics, meaning that each one sold will be well below cost. There could will be another 'Disposable Heroes' collapse if a more sensible approach isn't taken. Good service needs a reasonable profit. At the prices being charged, I can see trouble ahead there...

Mission for the month: Be inspired by the Olympics and get exercising!
