DC NEW SERIES AND ONE-SHOTS FOR OCTOBER

MULTI-VERSITY:
THE JUST #1

Grant Morrison,
Ben Oliver

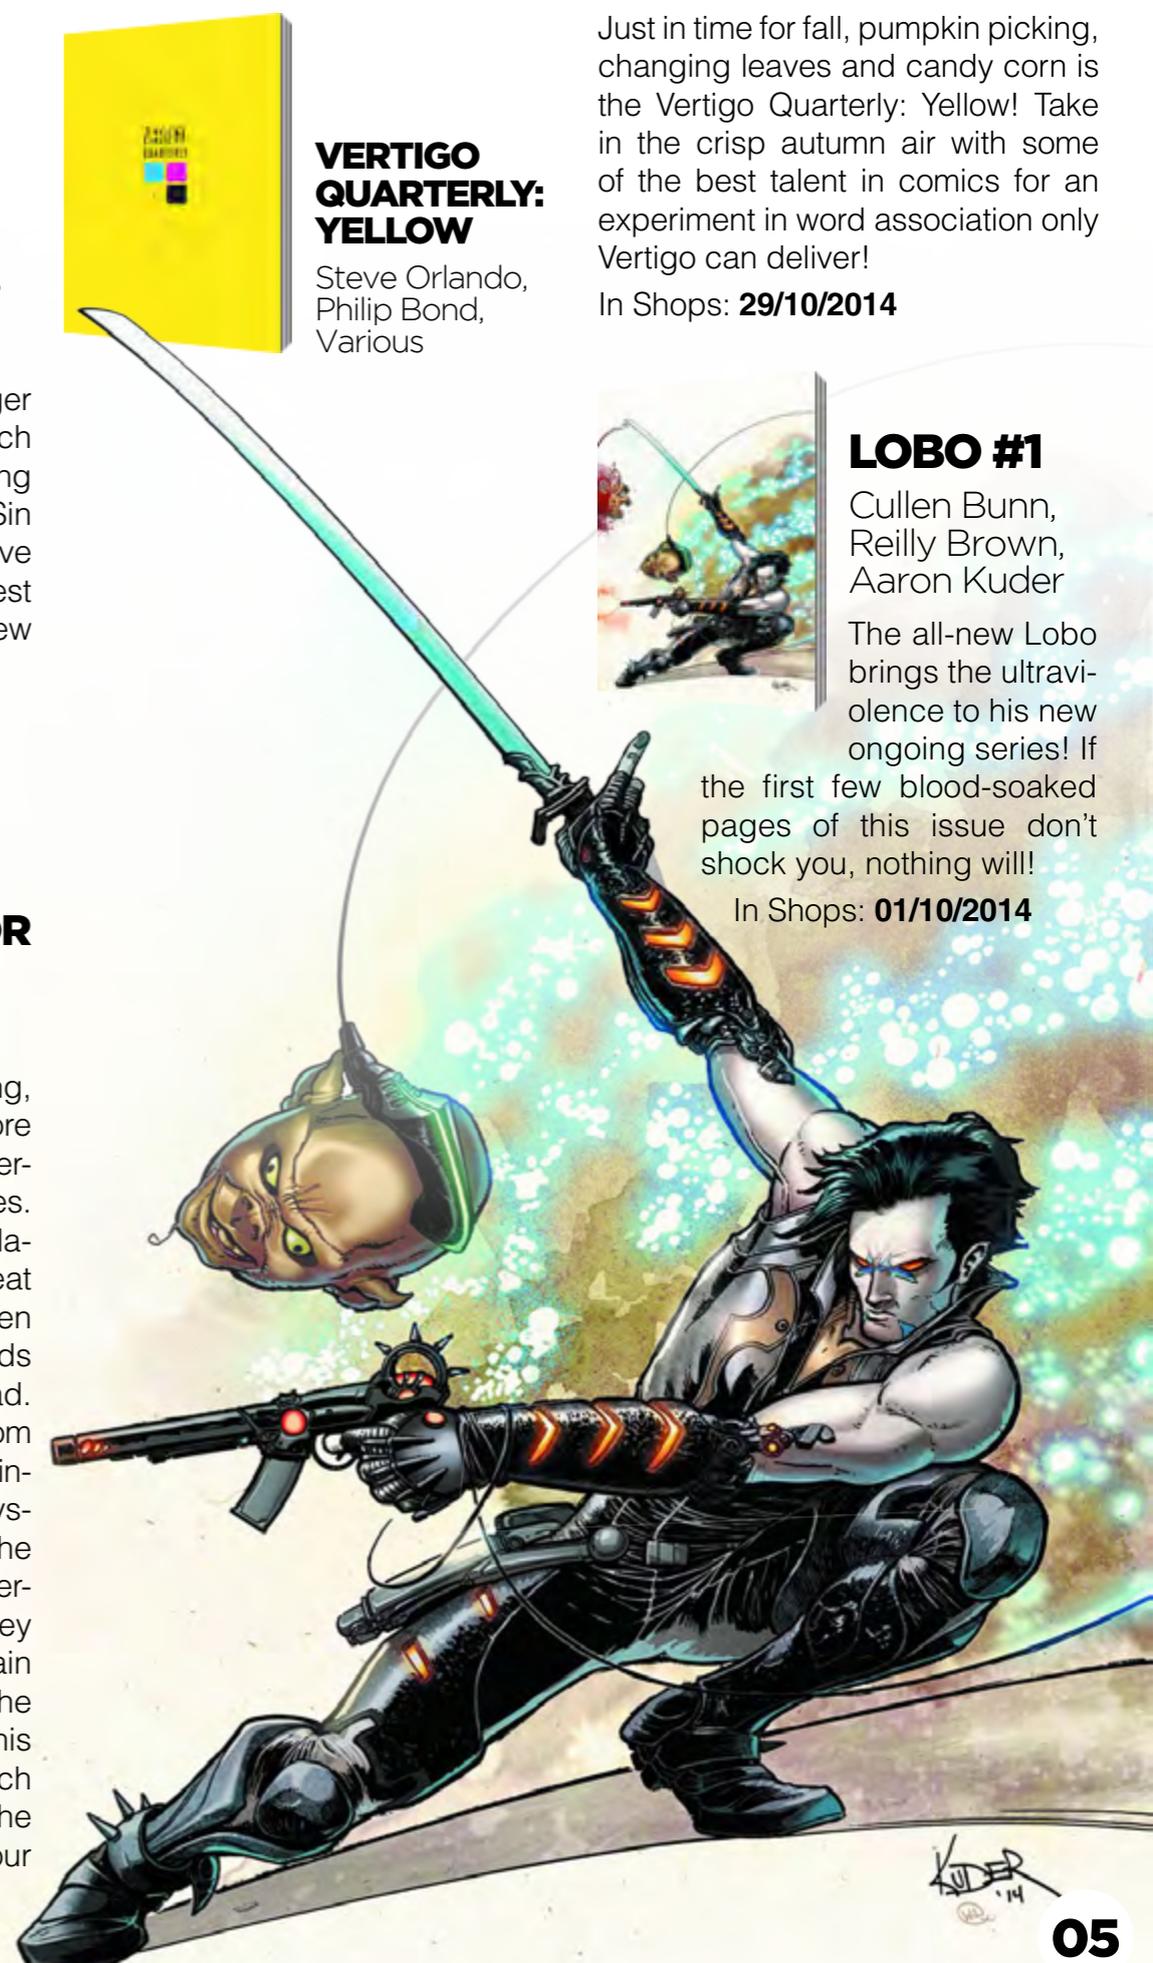

The next chapter of the greatest adventure in DC's history is here!

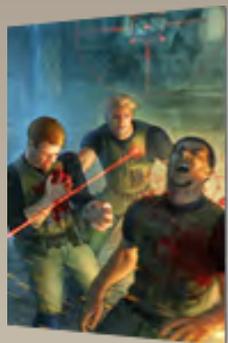

When they last collaborated, Grant Morrison joined artist Ben Oliver (Lobo, Batman/Superman) for the acclaimed Action Comics #0. For their next team-up, the two take a spin around the self-obsessed Earth-16 - a.k.a. Earth-Me!

With all of the world's threats having been handled long ago by their parents, the next generation of supers - including Chris Kent, Damien

Wayne, Alexis Luthor, Offspring, Megamorpho, Donna Troy and more - find themselves labeled as super-stars more often than super heroes. But with that fame comes complacency, and when a massive threat unlike anything they've ever seen surfaces, this pampered crew finds themselves in way over their head. What secret is Damien keeping from Chris that could tear the world's finest friends apart? Who is the mysterious killer lurking behind the scenes among these spoiled super-children? And what chance do they stand against the monstrous villain that's murdering its way across the Multiverse? All that and more in this exciting stand-alone issue which also acts as chapter three of the Multiversity saga. Join us, if your dare, for The Multiversity!

BREAKING THE RULES

Max Landis, son of film director John Landis, made a profanity laden video a few years back, talking about DC's infamous Death of Superman storyline. It is a well made film, about fifteen minutes long and packed full of famous actors. Provided you are not offended by the language, it is well worth a watch, but I digress. There was a passage in his monologue which recent comic news brought to mind.

"There is something my dad made up, which is he told me when I was little and frustrated about rules in movies he said "How do you kill a vampire?" and I was like stake through the heart, garlic, sunlight and my Dad was like "No. You can kill a vampire however the f you want because vampires don't fing exist! You can make up any kind of rules you want!"

He is right, a writer can decide which rules are implemented in their stories, and they are free to break them as and when they choose. Marvel and DC seem to have taken this attitude to heart recently, blithely killing characters, bringing them back, destroying the odd universe, making three of four more, predict the absolute future, ignore it a week later.

So now Thor is going to be a woman. Not a woman is going to wield the Hammer of Thor, she is going to be Thor. This reveal had many Marvel fans creasing their brows in confusion. Other characters have held Thor's Hammer and didn't suddenly sprout silly hats and unusually shiny armour. Why would it change this time?

Well the answer is simple; if Marvel wants it to happen, it can. If they think that it will boost sales, they can make anything happen to anyone at any time and in any way. There are no rules other than the rules they choose to impose and they have an absolute ability to break them. It is not impossible or even difficult for any comic book company to make these changes.

But it is lazy writing. Writers or editors can invent a new deus ex machine that proclaims "When the Watcher's eye is held up by that guy with an eyeball for a head everyone gets a new memory so we can shoehorn any storyline we want to into their comic." What they can't do is make that idea make sense to the audience. DC are just as guilty of this kind of laziness. Who can forget Superboy Prime punching the walls of reality, causing Jason Todd to return to life? What happened to the catastrophes and chaos left behind by the events of Forever Evil? It all looks like business as usual in the current comics.

If the big two publishers want to draw in new readers they need to establish that their universes make sense. Advising customers who ask about what is the best way to get into X-Men or Justice League is getting tricky. I have visions of me holding up a white board and scrawling out some Lovecraftian diagram while saying "So we had 52 different universes, but then Darkseid came along with the anti-life equation and... wait, did I talk about the effects of Booster Gold's time travel yet?"

You can choose to break the rules at any time, but if you do nothing but break them then you risk scarring away new customers. Plus you don't give the existing audience much incentive to come back to you next month.
